PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

IT would be easy to expatiate on the excellence of Hebrew learning, and the various advantages with which it is attended; but that is not the design of this preface. The increased and increasing cultivation of it by persons of all classes, indicates a general and growing sense of its utility, and supersedes the necessity of vindication or encomium.

Almost ever since the author has enjoyed the happiness of being a member of the Christian church, and particularly since he has had the privilege of living in this highly-favoured land; he has felt an ardent desire to call the attention of his fellow-christians to this important study, and to assist them in the pursuit of it. With this view he, more than two years ago, published a grammar; which has obtained considerable approbation from some of the first Hebrew scholars,* and has been received by the public in a manner more than equal to his largest expectations.

* "After an attentive perusal of Mr. Frey's Grammar, and after comparing it with others, I have to remark—that, in general, it equals the best Hebrew Grammars that have appeared—that his plan is altogether of a different nature, and highly superior—that in his attempts to procure an accurate pronunciation of the Hebrew language, he excels all his predecessors—that his view of the particles is a most superior and elaborate article—that, in fine, the Grammar possesses a rank high in Oriental literature."—Extract of a Letter from the Rev. James Kidd, Professor of Oriental Languages in the Marischal College and University of Aberdeen, to a friend in London.

"His examples of nouns adjective, according to their variations in number and regimen, page 32 to 36, are a valuable addition; and the view of the pronouns is improved, page 39 to 44, particularly by adding the prefix ב, which occurs as often as any other form. He has also given a fuller Table of the Particles than any other grammarian, p. 85—92."—Bap. Mag. 1813.

Agreeably to the intention expressed in the preface to his Grammar, he now ventures to bring forward a Dictionary: for, notwithstanding the many Hebrew lexicons and dictionaries which have been already published, he has long been of opinion, that one was yet wanted for the use of students of that language.

Some Hebrew Lexicons contain only the roots, with a few of the derivatives; and in those which exhibit most or all of the derivative words, these are ranged under their respective roots; so that persons who are not well acquainted with the rules for separating the serviles from the roots, are often at a loss where to find the word they want. The author feels no small satisfaction in being able to corroborate his opinion, of the impediment which this plan throws in the way of young students, by the authority of one of the first Hebraists of the last century. Dr. James Robertson, Professor of Oriental languages in the University of Edinburgh, in the Preface to his Clavis Pentateuchi, has the following observation: "It is well known to all who have the least acquaintance with the oriental tongues, that the principal difficulty they present, even to students tolerably familiar with their grammatical rules, lies in the investigation of the roots; for it is the genius of the Hebrew, as well as of the Chaldee, Syriac,

"One of Mr. Frey's objects in the composition of his grammar, has been to render it simple, and yet comprehensive. The tables of accents and particles are very complete; and the reading lessons in exercise IX. will show how differently Hebrew is read by Jewish and by Christian scholars. The directions for the formation of verbs through all their voices, moods, and tenses, are minutely given; and this part of the grammar manifests the author's critical acquaintance with the language which he professes to teach. In short, we must remark that Mr. Frey's mode of teaching the Hebrew is very masterly; that it is singularly calculated to facilitate the student's intimate knowledge of that language; and that it makes us acquainted with the process adopted by the Rabbis in the education of Jewish youth."—Monthly Review, Sep. 1815.

"It is but just, indeed, to state, that some grammars have been composed in English; but the number of these is small, and even these few are not free from considerable defects. The grammar of Parkhurst is without points; and without the true vowels, all Hebrew becomes confusion; that by Newton labours under the same disadvantage; and Lyon's Hebrew Grammar, although it teaches the system of the points, is too short to lead to a perfect knowledge of the language. From all these defects, that before us is completely free: Mr. Frey has given all the necessary rules, according to the best authorities; he has illustrated his rules with copious and apposite examples: he has given complete tables of the Hebrew particles: and at the end he has printed the whole Book of Psalms, from the excellent edition of the Hebrew Bible by Vander Hooght. Upon the whole, therefore, we cannot but recommend this grammar to general notice. It will be found a complete introduction to the study of Hebrew; and the Lexicon to be published by the same author, will, if executed with the same ability, materially assist in the cultivation of Hebrew literature. We hope, therefore, that Mr. F. will meet with encouragement in his endeavours to explain it. Of the price of this Work no one will complain, when the difficulty and expense of printing Hebrew are considered; it is within the reach of all: and the addition of the Psalms will render it peculiarly useful in schools."

and Arabic, to unite possessive pronouns, and also inseparable particles, both with nouns and verbs; which proves a source of extreme perplexity to young scholars in those languages."

The learned professor complains, as the result of his own experience in teaching, that in consequence of this difficulty, the progress of students in Hebrew was not at all proportioned to the labour employed, either by the tutor or the pupils. If there was cause for so serious a complaint, notwithstanding all the advantages enjoyed under such a tutor, it can excite no surprise, that many persons, not possessed of such advantages, have found the difficulty too great for their efforts to surmount, and have therefore abandoned the study in despair. The present dictionary entirely removes this difficulty, by exhibiting the roots and derivatives all arranged under one alphabet; so that a person who is merely acquainted with the letters, may turn at once to any word used in the Old Testament.

"The remark which has just been made, on the common method of placing the derivatives under their respective roots, is applicable to every Hebrew lexicon or dictionary the author has seen, except one, which he obtained from a friend, after his work was ready for press, and the prospectus was already before the public: Lexicon Hebraico-Chaldaico-Latino-Biblicum, Auctore P Carmelita, &c. Sub auspiciis Dom. Passionei, Cardinalis, 2 Tom. Avenione, 1765. The plan of this lexicon he had the pleasure of finding in many respects similar to his own; and he has not been backward to avail himself of all the assistance he could derive from it. It is a work of great merit; but, being in Hebrew and Latin only, its use is consequently confined to those who have previously acquired a knowledge of Latin. The present dictionary is adapted for all who understand either Latin or English.

Some dictionaries contain so much superfluous criticism, that, in seeking for the meaning of a word, the student is frequently bewildered in a maze of extraneous matter: in this work, the significations are given in the most plain and concise manner, according to the best authorities. The author has no idea of superseding or depreciating the more elaborate productions of profound philologists for the use of the advanced Hebraist. He hopes it will be remembered that his design is to assist students in learning the language, and to facilitate the perusal of the Hebrew Scriptures by persons who have made only a moderate proficiency, or who have received little or no instruction from a living tutor. With these humble pretensions, he conceived it would be unnecessary to accompany the various interpretations with particular references to the authorities by which they are supported. In cases where all respectable authorities are agreed, the insertion of their names would be ostentatious and useless: and in cases of real difficulty as to the true meaning, this dictionary will be found to contain the different senses in which such words have been understood by the most eminent lexicographers and critics.

The lexicons and concordances which have been chiefly followed, beside that already mentioned, are those of Buxtorf, Robertson, and Taylor. Assistance has also been obtained from the lexicons of Avenarius, Cocceius, Castell, and Pagninus; from the concordance of Marius de Calasio, and from the Lyra Prophetica of Bythner. The interpretations of the Septuagint, or the Vulgate, have sometimes been preferred to those of succeeding writers. The work has been much indebted to the many valuable criticisms accumulated in Pool's Synopsis. Considerable aid has been derived from the ingenious and judicious labours of Albert Schultens and James Robertson. And in numerous instances, advantage has been taken of all the information furnished by historians, geographers, travellers, or any other writers, Jewish or Christian, ancient or modern.

In the preface to his grammar, the author proposed, after the example of several eminent lexicographers, to introduce into this work the pronunciation of every Hebrew word in Roman characters; but this was considered by many Hebraists, as rendered unnecessary by the ample directions and examples which he has given in his grammar. The omission of this part of his original plan has enabled him to devote a column to the signification in Latin, which he has no doubt will be regarded as a valuable addition, especially by Hebrew students on the Continent.

It will be universally admitted by the learned, that after a person has acquired a little knowledge of any language, no method is better adapted to perfect his acquaintance with it, than composing exercises or translating into it from his own or any other tongue. To enable the Hebrew student to avail himself of this mode of improvement, the author has, with much labour and care, compiled the latter part of this work, which contains the principal words in the Latin and English languages, with those words which correspond to them in Hebrew. With regard to the nouns and verbs, in this part, he has thought it sufficient to give the former in their simple forms, and merely the roots of the latter; and the whole without vowels; as, before any successful attempts at composition can be made, the student must be well acquainted with all the inflexions of the verbs, and the use of the various prefixes and suffixes; and by a reference to the first part, he will always be enabled to determine the accuracy or inaccuracy of his exercises in these respects, as well as to affix the proper vowels to any word he may want to employ. In these vocabularies the author has not used the roots of Latin or English verbs, but those tenses by which the Hebrew roots are generally translated.

The early sheets of this dictionary, having been for many months in the hands of the public, the author has had opportunities of hearing different opinions respecting the plan he has adopted; aud it affords him great satisfaction to find the balance of opinions decidedly in its favour.*

* From the Rev. Thomas Fry, A.M. Rector of Emberton, and Chaplain to the Right Hon. Lord Erskine; and Mr. D'Allemand, Teacher of Hebrew, Chaldee, &c. &c.

"We have examined the specimen sent to us of your Hebrew Dictionary. There can be no doubt but that those who have little time, and no assistance from any Hebrew teacher, are greatly perplexed and retarded by the difficulty of finding the roots. The plan of your Dictionary will certainly remove this difficulty, and we therefore are happy to recommend it to the public patronage."

From the Rev. W. B. Collyer, D.D. F.A.S. &c.

"I have seen with the greatest satisfaction, and beg leave cordially to recommend your Hebrew, Latin, and English Dictionary, on a new and improved plan, which appears to me calculated for distinguished usefulness, particularly to facilitate the study of the sacred language."

From the Rev. J. Gilbert, Classical Tutor at Rotherham Academy.

"You will accept my best acknowledgments for the numbers of your new work, and in complying with your request to look it over, and state my sentiments, I am happy to say, that your Dictionary appears to me to furnish what was before an important desideratum. The student will be now in possession of the same facilities toward the attainment of Hebrew, with which Schrevelius had before supplied him towards the acquisition of Greek; and though some may object to your work, as they have before to his, that it is too indulgent to indolence, yet the learner, and especially if he have not the assistance of a tutor, will feel you to be entitled to his best thanks. Your labour will greatly lessen his; will save him much valuable time; and will, perhaps, in many instances, prevent him from relinquishing, in despair or disgust, a pursuit which he may now prosecute with ease and success. Besides the derivatives, the addition of proper names is no unimportant advantage. On the whole, the plan is calculated to be highly useful to those for whom it is designed, and it is so far executed with ability."

From the Rev. William Steadman, Tutor of the Academy at Bradford, Yorkshire.

"My dear Sir,

"I cannot but think that all the lovers of sacred literature must feel greatly indebted to you for the assistance you have rendered the English student in the cultivation of the Hebrew tongue. Your edition of Vander Hooght furnishes a very seasonable supply of Hebrew Bibles, and does honour to the English press. Your Hebrew Grammar is one of the most valuable I have met with. Had such an one fallen into my hands when I first began to study the Hebrew language, I should have made a much more speedy progress, and, in particular, should have acquired a far greater correctness in its pronunciation. But your Dictionary I consider as a work of still greater importance, especially to such as apply themselves to the acquisition of the language without the assistance of a skilful tutor. To them, the finding of the roots, after all the direction the plainest grammar rules can give, remains an insuperable difficulty. That difficulty your dictionary completely removes. I have wondered that nothing of the kind has been before undertaken; and felt greatly

Objections, have, however, been raised; the principal ones he will just mention :—

the want of such help myself, being destitute of a tutor in my application to the language: and I congratulate you on being the instrument in the hand of providence, of making the path to the acquisition of the language, in which the oracles of God were first delivered to mankind, so much more smooth and pleasant. Wishing you much success in all your endeavours for promoting the cause of learning and of Christianity, both among Gentiles and your own countrymen,

"I remain, &c. &c."

From the Rev. W. Ballentine, Master of the South Crescent Academy, Bedford Square.

"It was with peculiar pleasure that I heard of your intention to publish a Hebrew Dictionary on the plan which you have adopted. And now that some of the parts lie before me, I assure you I am not disappointed. Your plan, which is to give every word found in the Old Testament in its Alphabetical order, together with its root, is most excellent, and must, when completed, be an invaluable work to the young student. The same plan, pursued in some of the most approved Greek Lexicons, has, undoubtedly, tended to facilitate the acquisition of the Greek. May your work be no less generally useful in the study of the Hebrew Scriptures. The execution, as well as its plan, is certainly calculated to give it general circulation."

"With great pleasure we notice the first part of another Hebrew Lexicon in English and Latin, by Mr. Frey. He proposes to arrange all the roots and derivatives under one alphabet, so that any word in the Hebrew Bible may be found at once, without difficulty. In other dictionaries, the derivatives are to be found under their roots only. When a learner, therefore, meets with a word he does not know, he must first ascertain the root before he can find it. To a young student this is always a serious difficulty, often an insuperable one; and even to a veteran in the school, sometimes presents a wide scope for investigation and research. In Mr. Frey's plan he finds relief in a moment. This is the first and distinguishing excellence of the work. It contains further a complete catalogue of proper names. In the course of his reading, the young student meets with proper names which he does not know to be such, and in investigating the supposed or real roots of which he spends much time and labour to little purpose. The catalogue here alphabetically arranged prevents this trouble. Each page of the Dictionary is divided into four columns. In the second, stand the derivatives alphabetically arranged: in the first, the roots from which the derivatives spring. In the same column are found the roots, placed alphabetically, and with their meaning annexed. The third column contains a Latin, and the fourth, an English version. Such are the outlines of the plan pursued in this dictionary. The typography is beautiful, and is much set off by the whiteness of the paper. It is a work of immense labour, and has not its merits affected by small spots and slight blemishes. May it go on and prosper."—Bap. Mag. Oct. 1814.

"This is a work intended for learners, who always, at first, find great difficulty in determining on the roots of Hebrew words, and are puzzled, hour after hour, in searching after them. It is less a dictionary than a companion to the dictionary; or rather, a preparative for the use of the dictionary; and it follows the author's grammar of the language with advantage. It will certainly contribute to save the student's time, and thereby enable him to advance further in his general studies, if such be his disposition. His labour is shortened by this assistant; but, labour he must still expect to exert; if he will not dig in the mine, he shall find no gem to reward him. Only those who have earnestly examined the subject, can conceive the labour of such a work, and the extensive stores of knowledge it requires. We must therefore pardon a few inaccuracies into which Mr. Frey has been betrayed by his learned guides. The addition of the Latin renderings is judicious; it contributes essential assistance to the scholar; while it also promotes accuracy and correctness. We

Some persons have objected that he has done too much, by making the acquisition of the language so easy as to encourage indolence in the student. To this he will reply with Dr. James Robertson, who replies to a similar objection against his Clavis Pentateuchi, that the object of his labour has been to render the study of this language more and more easy, and that if it were in his power to make it ten times easier still, he would certainly do it.

Others have objected that the author has not done enough; for, that with every derivative, he ought to have indicated the part of speech to which it belongs, and all the particulars necessary to a grammatical praxis. But to do this in a work containing every word in the Bible, perhaps, would have justly exposed him to the charge of encouraging idleness in the student, by leaving little or nothing for application to perform.

These objections cannot both be well founded; and the author is unable to discover any real foundation for either. They seem calculated to neutralize each other, and go far towards inducing him to hope that, with all the faults of his work, (and what human work is faultless?) he is at no very great distance from the proper medium between doing too much and doing too little.

For the use of the vowel points, the author thinks it unnecessary to offer either apology or defence. To persons who hold a different opinion, or entertain any doubts on the subject, he would recommend an attentive perusal of the following treatises: A Dissertation on the Hebrew Vowel Points, showing that they are an original and essential part of the Language, by P. WHITFIELD, Liverpool, 1748. A Dissertation concerning the Antiquity of the Hebrew Language, Letters, Vowel Points and Accents, by JOHN GILL, D.D. London, 1767; and since reprinted among the doctor's sermons and tracts. Dissertatio de Genuina Punctorum Vocalium Antiquitate, &c. præmissa Clavi Pentateuchi, Auctore JACOBO ROBERTSON, S.T.D. Ling. Oriental. Profess. &c. Edinburgh, 1770. To the statements and arguments of these able and learned writers, nothing has yet been opposed that wears the appearance of plausibility. But till they shall have received a satisfactory answer, the system they maintain may justly be considered as having full possession of the field.

The author cannot conclude this preface without expressing those acknowledgments, which are so justly due, for the assistance and encouragement afforded him in his literary undertakings.

are glad to see that this gentleman's perseverance in the best of causes meets with support from the public, sufficient to induce him to continue his labours for the benefit of the religious world, as well as for his own nation in particular."—Literary Panorama, Nov. 1814.

The labour, care, and patience, requisite in correcting and revising for the press Hebrew works, especially with points and accents, none can conceive but those who have actually been engaged in it.

Yet having been blessed with a long continuance of uninterrupted health, and having been careful to redeem every moment of time, the Author has been enabled, in the course of the last six years, notwithstanding numerous other and still more important engagements, to publish three editions of his Narrative; his Hebrew Grammar;* a new edition of Vander Hooght's Hebrew Bible; and the present work. He feels himself, therefore, under the strongest obligations, in the first place, to offer up his unfeigned thanksgivings to Almighty God, "the Father of lights, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift." It is well known that the expense of printing in foreign or dead languages is very great. From some peculiar circumstances the expenses of the above publications have far exceeded the author's original estimate, and he would most probably have been prevented from completing them, had not the public acceptance of them also exceeded his expectations.

Of a large edition of his Hebrew Grammar a few only are left on hand. There was a considerable demand for his Hebrew Bible in the course of its publication in parts, and the demand has been still greater since it has been completed. As a part only of a dictionary can be but of little use, the author did not expect many copies of this work to be sold before the whole should be finished; he has, however, the gratification to state that the sale has greatly increased with the publication of each successive part; and now it is completed, he trusts it will meet with the general approbation of the public. For these encouragements, as well as for the kind reception the author has met with amongst Christians of all denominations while travelling more than thrice all over the United Kingdom to preach the everlasting gospel, and to solicit contributions in aid of that cause which lieth nearest his heart, namely, the melioration of the temporal condition, and the promotion of the spiritual welfare, of his Jewish brethren, he finds himself utterly at a loss for words to express his feelings of thankfulness, and he will ever esteem it his duty to devote his time and talents to the service of the public.

As the acceptance of a work by the public often depends on the character it receives from respectable critics, the author feels himself much indebted to the gentlemen connected with several of the literary journals, for their early and candid reviews of his different publications; and he indulges the hope that those who have not yet noticed his dictionary will find it not altogether unworthy of their recommendation. The author requests those gentlemen who have so handsomely favoured him with testimonies in approbation of his works to accept this public tribute of thanks for their kindness.

May the blessing of God Almighty accompany this work, and make it the means of communicating a clearer knowledge of the Sacred Scriptures, and thereby exciting to a more useful and holy life, and to him shall be all the praise and glory. Amen

December 23, 1815.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In presenting to the public the present edition of his Hebrew, Latin, and English dictionary, the author has but few remarks to make. Soon after his late arrival from America, he was repeatedly solicited to republish that work, but the great expence of that edition, which necessarily rendered the price so high as to prevent many from purchasing it, he considered an insurmountable objection. After much consideration, however, he has adopted the present plan of abridging it without abridging its utility, by which means the price has been so considerably reduced, as to enable the poorest Hebrew student to procure it.

The Latin translation, which was chiefly designed for the use of foreigners, is left out, all the words, a few excepted, beginning with ו wav, which may easily be found without that letter, are omitted, and so are the proper names, they being found almost in the same manner in the English translation of the Bible.

Those roots which have no signification annexed are such as are out of use, and their signification uncertain, but are retained in all dictionaries on account of the words derived from them.

That this work may greatly facilitate the study of the Sacred Scriptures, which are able to make men wise unto salvation, is the sincere desire of
